

We're here ready to help.

As we enter another week dealing with the realities of COVID-19, a small light at the end of the tunnel is emerging. Across the country, states are beginning the slow process of returning to what will be the “new normal.” Throughout this crisis, EG Industries has continued to supply the world’s leading brands in medical devices with critical components under the most demanding circumstances we’ve ever witnessed-- in the process pushing our systems, teams, and vendors to the limits.

As our country and industries come out of this crisis, we realize this isn’t the end but the beginning of a revival that poses another group of unique challenges. The new business landscape will be filled with uncertainty in terms of recovery timelines, compelling all of us to adjust forecasts on a weekly, if not daily basis, given the dynamic nature of demand across the globe. Rest assured knowing that we’re here ready to help and serve our global customers with high quality parts made at our facilities throughout North America.

If anything, this crisis has taught us to expect the unexpected and to be prepared to react safely and deploy solutions in concert with the ever-changing realities of our markets. In this regard, please don’t hesitate to contact your EG Business Development Director for any changes in your volume requirements in the next few weeks and/or months, as well as anticipated shifts in business requiring additional capacity.

Thank you for your understanding, flexibility, and continued support. All of us at EG Industries remain committed to safety, sustainability and operational excellence. That commitment has never been stronger and we look forward to re-engaging, re-invigorating and re-EGniting opportunities together!

Wishing you well,

John Hoskins

